The Smartness of Linen in the New Spring Gowns and Their Adaptability to Any Woman—The Popularity of Pompadour Chiffons and Similar Sheer Flowered Materials for Summer Wear—Long Soft Folds Still the Last Cry of Fashion—The Ultra-Fashionable Distinctive Note.

THINK it is nothing easier to get and then original, it is something of a shock to see a sleeve from a prominent Parisian as a reputation. The only difficult thing to get is the right sort of a reputation, for the wearing qualities of a reputation may always safely be guaranteed. Once a woman acquires the reputation of being beautiful she will always be pointed out as a beauty and the reputation for beauty will cling to her like the perfume of a willow tree long after it has faded from the nostrils of the person who has taken an unjudicial person as her model with a field glass to discover any remains of beauty in the once lovely woman. Paris, in feminine eyes, is just like this. For generations Paris has been a centre of fashion and the Muses of women who loved fine dress. The reputation for making the loveliest and most correct clothes upon the globe belongs to Paris and yet some of the illustrations in this article will show that a woman may get as badly made a gown in Paris as anywhere else.

It is quite true that women can get amazingly exquisite gowns in Paris and it is equally true that they can get just as well made gowns in New York. There is no longer need to hire across the water with a bottle of smelling salts, a silver sheet and a pained expression in order to get a merely made gown from Paris. A woman may procure all she wants in this line with far less trouble here.

There is almost as much to be learned in studying the fashions in a French city as in admitting its good points. One learns what to avoid and where mistakes may be made. One knows that very small mistakes will spoil the set and appearance of an entire dress and it is surprising how carelessness, that sometimes comes, among the best in Paris will send out faulty frocks that a smartly dressed woman in America would refuse to wear.

Everyone knows, of course, all about the famous Long Champs race just outside of Paris, and Figure C illustrates a gown selected as being one of the most notable there. It came from a prominent house and was worn by a prominent woman. At first glance one sees that there is nothing new in a skirt with pleats attached below the belt and several attachments above the hem at the bottom. We Americans do not need to visit Paris to procure a skirt like that. What affects one more is the careful set of the bodice, which is narrow where it needs breadth and is also long, which makes the front above up to midway wrinkles that are by no means either good form or good for the form. Here one learns the lesson that this cut of jacket will not stand work a touch, for it is a set of bodice jacket worn over a full skirt. The bodice is full at the gathers just the yoke and opens over a white stock and a tab and embroidered yoke. The fitted, shaped velvet collar is attached to the neck on the yoke and is trimmed with buttons in the points. The sleeve shows that it is narrow for the gathers in the armhole and the puff over the gather at the elbow. Another puff is arranged even the elbow and a cuff is put to wear a sleeve puff and ruffle of white.

Some Very Bad Mistakes Paris Has Made.

It is quite evident that, although this gown is sent to America as a representative frock from the Long Champs races, the woman of good judgment and some skill in dressing could improve upon its lines. The sleeve has no lines of grace whatever, and no distinctive style. There seems to be an indication about it as to whether the top of the lower portion should be horizontal, and the whole sleeve is undecided in tone, and the beholder is left to guess which part of the sleeve was originally intended to be full.

Figure B is scarcely less unattractive, so far as style and construction is a gown. The bodice being lady, and there is nothing new in a skirt with three medium wide folds around the middle, three near the knees and three attachments above the hem, which is barely medium width. One looking for something new and distinctive at a long front, which is slightly skirted from the belt up a few inches. The front of the bodice is a little above the girdle of pompadour much time and thought are spent in making rug on each side. These attach to the

How a Skirt Shivered Wrong About the Hips Out of the Figure.

The loose jacket is hung badly and sticks out in an ungraceful line in front. Loose jackets are fashionable, but they should be well hung in order to get the lines of beauty which they possess. There is a little turned-back collar, which is braided, as are the jacket fronts, and the bottom of the full jacket is finished with a hem and two tucks. The jacket is skirted around the shoulders and sleeve tops, and is worn with a white stock and shirt waist, or Dutch neck, showing above the jacket collar.

Figure D, another representative dress from the races at Long Champs, is of velvet, white former frocks were of light weight cloth. This velvet gown would be quite good were it not for the skirt. The best modistes agree that a skirt skived in that manner about the hips cuts off the figure and deprives it of grace in the case of a full person, while it is a positive disgrace to a short one. Another thing that strikes one as anything but pretty is the perfectly plain wide girdle worn with the dress. It looks as though the girdle were an afterthought and there was not sufficient material left to make it of. The skirt is made with two pleats forming a panel down the front from the belt to the hem. The bodice has a stock, yoke, front panel and long shoulder and sleeve points of lace, outlined with green and pompadour embroidery. The sleeve point extends as part of the yoke all the way down the sleeve to where the cuff meets it at the elbow. The bodice which borders this point is carried on down the open part of the cuff and around it. There are shaped capelines on the shoulder and a tab in front. A piece of the material shows below the stock. The fullness of the sleeve hangs from the point on the outside and is quite baggy at the elbow. There are three lace ruffles below the sleeve cuff. The arrangement of this dress at the elbow is quite good. Quite a contrast to these gowns is shown in Figure A, which illustrates an American built gown that is smart in every detail, although simple in effect. The material is brown pompadour chiffon, in white and pale green effects. The skirt is closely skirted for not more than an inch below the belt to make its fullness hang gracefully. It is made up over white chiffon on a foundation of white silk. A deep plumage about the lines of the skirt is headed by half-inch tuck, with narrow brown velvet ribbon above the lace. An Example of a Full Skirt Dressed Gracefully.

The dress has a hem over an inch in width, headed by velvet ribbon, and below the hem falls a similar drape over a plain cut. The effect of the two lower drapes is produced by merely running a rather wide tuck around the dress. The bodice has a deep yoke of white lace, which extends to the belt in front and is quite shallow in the back. The front of the bodice is a little above the girdle of pompadour much time and thought are spent in making rug on each side. These attach to the

The lace front blooms softly between and what shallow back yoke. The rest of the dress is a deep velvet, which is slightly skirted around three velvet buttons on each side. It is fastened with three buttons. The sleeve consists of a single deep, narrow section. The sleeve is edged with velvet ribbon. The undersleeve is a lace puff at wrist and careful study of harmonious who finished with a drape of lace at the elbow, headed by velvet ribbon and open upon the front of the arm. This opening is headed at the top by velvet ribbon bound around four buttons on each side. The rest of the sleeve is fitted to the wrist, where

The Climax to the Capture of Boston's Back Bay Runaway Heiress.

For a Variation on the Good Old Romances, a Rich and Pretty Girl Runs Away. There is a Chase Over Seas by the Stern Papa, Finally the Real Hero Captures Her, and All Will End Happily Next Tuesday in a Most Brilliant and Fashionable Wedding.

THE HEIR-LOOM OF A FAMOUS BOSTON HOUSE, MISS CLAIRE PRINCE, has been the subject of a romance which has been the talk of the town for years. She is a young woman, now about 20 years of age, with a wealth and a family tree reaching back into colonial times. He is young, tall, handsome, a lawyer, a politician, a soldier and a splendid horseman.

Miss Claire Prince, if not as wealthy, is a member of a family almost equally distinguished. She is a granddaughter of the late P. O. Prince, formerly Mayor of Boston, a descendant of the very wealthy banker and politician, Frederick H. Prince. Her mother, Mrs. Prince, is a fashionable Back Bay physician, with a very excellent practice among the society set. Miss Prince's mother is a granddaughter of the famous statesman and senator, Rufus Choate. Claire Prince is a cousin of Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears, Boston's noted society leader. The Prince line is a splendid one on the "water side" of Boston.

But it takes more than youth and beauty, blood and millions to make a true romance. And that is what Claire Prince and Roger Wolcott's really is.

Handsome, dashing, cavalier Roger Wolcott has known Claire Prince for years, for she is his mother, Corinne Wolcott, a daughter of this season, has been close friends since young girlhood.

Off late Roger Wolcott had not seen much of Miss Prince. But this season, as she has been about in Paris for a number of weeks, meeting her relatives, he has had the gift of her only as a little girl, but of the sisters till one faithful day last winter.

On the 11th of February Mrs. Wolcott gave a dinner at the Hotel Somerset in honor of her daughter Corinne, at which were present a large number of the Prince family and of her special favorite.

Every one remarked how handsome the two girls looked as they stood together in the drawing room of the balcony, beneath a loving gaze.

Corinne Prince is a sister and a sister and a sister. She is a sister and a sister and a sister. She is a sister and a sister and a sister. She is a sister and a sister and a sister.

As Roger Wolcott, who was chief waiter, saw her standing there, dressed in dainty white, with trimmings of silver spanglers, his mother's hand turned to her cheek and thought her the loveliest girl he had ever seen. His certainty was love to look upon.

He stepped up and asked for a dance the evening of the orchestra. He asked out from the balcony overhead. As Claire Prince studied her dance card, he was looking at her, before giving an answer, her radiant smile became still more fascinated with her loveliness.

was always in attendance, paying court and devotion to the girl whose heart and hand he had a ready won, but whose beauty and wealth seemed to elude him now and more.

Miss Prince was one of the dancers in the recent Wilson theatricals at Conley Hall, when that polished play, "The Tomboy," was presented to warm audiences only the last week of April.

It was observed that as quickly as her part was over Claire Prince always slipped on her street costume and hurried over to the horse show in the Mechanics' Building.

Roger Wolcott was sure to be loitering around the entrance, or loitering around up and down the grandstand in front of the Wolcott box.

As soon as Miss Prince arrived the two young people had a day of eloping away from the house, where they were the most observed of all. "We're going down to see the horses," they said in passing themselves to their friends, as they tripped down to the stable.

Each of them has an intense love for horses, and in looking over the pretty and spirited high bred creatures that stood so docile in the stalls the two lovers found a mutual interest that drew them still closer together.

Claire Prince is an expert whip and a skillful rider. Roger Wolcott, it is like a coachman, has been riding since he was a boy.

In the summer of 1898 when Claire Prince was a student at the University of California, she was with the first Massachusetts Cavalry Artillery.

That part of his career brought out some very notable traits in the young man's character.

In the Spring of 1898 when President McKinley called for troops, when every parent with social or political pull, who had an eligible son, was rushing to the State House to get an army officer's commission from Governor Wolcott.

He served throughout the war and returned with a commission as captain in the 1st Massachusetts Cavalry Artillery.

family live six months of the year in a beautiful Colonial house, at "Hill Farm," in the suburbs of Boston. It is not the first love of either of the young people. They saw that Roger Wolcott in twenty six and Miss Prince twenty, ages at which all young people of the social set have seen a deal of life.

The Runaway Romance of Pretty Miss Prince.

Roger Wolcott, ever since attaining his majority and graduating from Harvard in 1900, has been considered the most eligible young man in Boston for a young woman and dancer.

He has had his attention on a good many young women, but directly stopped short of the matrimonial point. So often has this been reported that he had the name of being a very eligible young man.

Last year it really looked as if he had fallen a captive to one of the fascinating Peabody girls. The engagement was su-perannounced by the end of the year, but the young man had not yet had an opportunity to see the young woman.

But of late even these malicious rumors have been put to rest. Claire Prince has been seen at the house of her father, Mr. Prince, and at the house of her mother, Mrs. Prince, and at the house of her grandfather, Mr. Prince.

Poisons That Lurk in a Bread and Milk Diet.

NOBODY would be willing to bread and milk a child. Miss Justine Ingersoll, of New Haven, Conn., is a devoted mother, but it is when given to monkeys, she says, that she is most careful. She says that she has seen many monkeys die of various diseases, and she has seen many of them die of various diseases, and she has seen many of them die of various diseases.

ALL reformers and advocates of radical changes in old-fashioned habits doubt whether any reformer had a more discouraging task than that of setting right the errors which exist in regard to the proper feeding of the human race. For any one start in to instruct the population of the monkey cage as to how the subjects should be fed in order to keep well, and see what he will get.

They went ashore, attacked the natives and were soon surrounded. From that time they were never well behaved. When we were with the natives we were the second officer. The natives were very kind to us. We were very kind to them. We were very kind to them.

My wife accompanied me as a journey to a little village in the north. The natives were very kind to us. We were very kind to them. We were very kind to them.

After dinner my wife, who was careful to show no fear, sat down in the midst of them and learned from the women how to do the native knitting. They were proud to show something to a "white" woman. They were very kind to us. We were very kind to them. We were very kind to them.

The girls of Navaho are pretty, but the men are very vicious and hide them on the arrival of a ship. The presence of my wife, however, caused this interdiction to be removed for me, and they came to see me. They were very kind to us. We were very kind to them. We were very kind to them.

I was now determined to learn all that was to be known of the customs and characteristics of these people, the men of the headhunting, which portends the nature of a woman and a man.

On Chiriqui Island we were at a party starting on a head hunt. The natives were very kind to us. We were very kind to them. We were very kind to them.

"Tell them," I said to the man who spoke a little English. "I will give them some of my pipe and a knife. I will give them some of my pipe and a knife. I will give them some of my pipe and a knife."

I showed them a piece of tobacco, a bit of pipe, and a little knife. They were very kind to us. We were very kind to them. We were very kind to them.

THIS MONSTER, TOO, SHALL PASS AWAY.

He is Our Biggest Enemy at This Moment. Great Intelligence Guides Him. He Defies the Power of the Multitude. But in Due Time He Will Find His Place on the Dust Heap of History, With the Rack, the Rope that Hung Witches, the Books on Sorcery and the Other Things That Were Once Powerful for Evil.

IT IS important for all of us to take a cheerful view of conditions.

We must, of course, realize the dangers that threaten us. We must plan and fight ceaselessly for better conditions. But, to encourage us in the work and keep us at it, we should constantly remind each other, not of our troubles, but of the great progress that has been made, of the hope ahead.

The great source of strength in all great religious movements has been THE FAITH OF THE BELIEVERS. That faith made them accept defeat calmly when it came, certain of victory in the end. It kept them full of strength born of hope. More than anything else it has won their victories and upheld them in their temporary disappointments and failures.

The men and women of modern republics or semi-republics are engaged in great industrial and economic battles. In these battles they, too, should be sustained by faith.

They should have faith in themselves, faith in the justice of their cause, and, above all, faith in history, which, studied intelligently, PUTS BEFORE US STEADY, CEASELESS MOVEMENT.

Our problem now is the trust problem. It grows more serious every day. We have a justice of the Supreme Court telling us during the past week that those who hope for success must bow to the trusts—that their power is the greatest national danger. We know that the trusts, controlling money, control our legislation almost entirely and control our judges very largely.

The trusts have as their weapons money, its respectability and its power. They control, directly and indirectly, the majority of successful newspapers and successful politicians.

It is useless, seemingly, for the individual to oppose them. At this moment it seems hopeless even for the united people to oppose them. For we must not with our ballots, and, year after year, we must see those whom we elect bought and owned by the trusts that we intend to overthrow. It looks like a long and hopeless fight. It may be long, but it is not hopeless, and we should consider ourselves lucky in having so mild a problem to deal with.

Those who have lived before us on this earth, who have brought civilization up to its present point, had greater troubles and greater discouragements.

Men were, in olden times, tortured, burned alive, because they announced simple scientific truths. Every child accepts these truths now—but superstition or selfish interests opposed them then.

At one time IN EVERY PART OF THE WORLD a man who told a new truth was hated and submitted to physical torture.

But the truth-telling continued, and truth really rules the world today. There are few places where a man may not say what he thinks.

The rack, thumbscrew, the general apparatus for burning and torturing human beings, have disappeared.

LIBERTY OF THOUGHT HAS WON ITS VICTORY.

There was a time when every man had to do as he was told on this earth, and he had to think as he was told about the world to come.

Every corner of the earth was a hotbed of intolerance and of religious brutality. The devotees of each religion hated and killed the devotees of every other.

Our own much-praised Puritan ancestors were monsters of intolerance and bigotry.

It certainly would have seemed hopeless and foolish in the old days to expect that religious freedom would ever come. But it has come.

The trust is the mammoth issue, and we have selected the mammoth of olden times to represent it.

The fate of that mammoth, now vanquished from the earth's surface, will be the fate of the trusts one day.

How the problem will be solved, or when it will be solved, no man can say.

Humanity may produce a marvelous combination—displaying in the man the capacity to accumulate the world's money and, at the same time, preferring the welfare of humanity to useless fortune.

Some really great men may come along, combining with the organizing power of a Napoleon and the accumulative instinct of a Rockefeller the splendid foolishness of a Lincoln or a Wilson.

But it is not likely that any individual will do for us the great work of checking monopolistic cupidity and of reclaiming for the use of the people the national wealth that a few have absorbed.

The people themselves really will do the work in the future as they have done it in the past. Some great names will be added to history, a few men of unusual talent will get the credit for that which has been done by millions of the unknown.

Eventually the trust of today will become one of the interesting incidents of history.

The railroads of the nation, the oil wells of the nation—all the natural wealth of the people will belong to the people.

Education, increase in human decency, will, perhaps, do more than anything else to bring about the change.

Once every great man was proud of the right to inflict death, once the greatest philosophers, even Aristotle, were unable to conceive of a society without slaves.

Today no man outside of savagery really enjoys inflicting the death penalty, and no man outside of savagery defends slavery.

The time will come when men will be ashamed to take from the people what belongs to them.

The time will come when a man of ability will be ashamed to deprive women and children of necessities in order to add that which he does not need. There will be a good many hard political fights, a great deal of talking and writing. But eventually this trust question will be settled as other questions have been settled, and we shall pass on as a race to other and higher problems.

It is well to remember for our comfort and encouragement that time and necessity can do everything that the accepted and apparently permanent trouble of today becomes eventually the disagreeable memory of tomorrow, and, finally, a part of almost forgotten history.

Scientists Believe Wonderful Guatemalan Insect Will Rid the White Staple of the Pest Which Threatens Its Destruction.

A red ant, hitherto supposed to be without a mission on earth, and among the most worthless of created things, has, if scientists of the United States Department of Agriculture have judged him rightly, suddenly assumed a position of vast importance in the nation's economy and a money value of a billion dollars. This Guatemalan insect, they declare, will soon be engaged in a gigantic war to the death with the boll weevil, destroyer of cotton, and, as is predicted, the ant, legions, after the sanguinary conflict, have utterly destroyed the pest of the American cotton bolls, a saving of $250,000,000 a year will ensue to the growers of the white staple, and renewed profits will come to the industries, and higher wages to the toilers of New England's great manufacturing cities.

Can Probably Be Acclimated

The question that has a quarter of a billion dollars' worth of interest for the cotton raisers and manufacturers is: Can this ant be acclimated to the United States? If the ant is acclimated, it will be a great help to the cotton raisers and manufacturers.

Special to the Sunday American.
Newport, June 2.—The John R. Tooleys,
Mr. Tooley was Mrs. Tooley's husband.

The news of a secret starlight picnic at the Third Beach last night by a number of the cottagers who drove there in their automobiles to that picturesque spot, came out only this afternoon. The cottage colony is trying to find out who arranged it and who took part.

Peabody Jones, Mrs. DeForest Danielson,
Mrs. Bell and Elliot and a dozen other prominent cottagers were being held up along the fashionable drive today and accused of being responsible for the charming affair and keeping it quiet.

A supper was taken to the spot in champagne buffet baskets, and there was music for some of the famous cottagers in with milk reported leaving music, and the cottage colony is trying to find out who arranged it and who took part.

Mr. William C. Tooley, who was formerly
Mr. Tooley's husband, was married to Mrs. Tooley in 1900. He is a native of Newport and has been in the city for many years. He is a successful businessman and has a large fortune. He is now in

RACING RESULTS AT GRAVESEND BOXING AUSTRALIAN AFTER JEFFRIES YACHTS BOSTON YACHT CLUB'S BIG REGATTA OTHER SPORTS

HARVARD FRESHMEN TURN TABLES ON YALE BOYS.

Crimson Youngsters, Well Supported by Their Cheering Classmates, Down Eli's Kids on Soldiers Field, 6 to 2

For the second time this year the Harvard Freshmen crossed the yard-stick with the Yale Freshmen. Last year at the 100 yd. race the first game was the cover score of 1 to 0. The men with the crimson sweaters partially regained their lost laurels by winning the game on Soldiers Field yesterday. It is the decisive score of 6 to 2.

The Harvard Freshmen gave fine support to their team. With colors bright and drums beating, they marched to the field and were always ready with a cheering shout to cheer the racing spirit of the 100 yd. race. After the game the class gathered around their victorious team and gave cheer after cheer. Then, looking across the field at their head, they had the famous "sweepstakes" until they had the square.

Harvard First to Score.
The first part of the game was slow and uninteresting. Evans succeeded in making one run for Harvard in the second and Yale went two across the plate in the third. Harvard seemed to have the advantage in the field, and Yale showed up better in the last.

In the sixth Harvard succeeded in tying the score. It was in the eighth that the game was won. Pratt, who had been pitching in first game, came out to pitch and seemed unable to control the ball. His support in the field was poor also. It was this alone which accounted for at least two of the runs.

Evans and Russell both made singles. Then Giles was hit in the face with a ball and Foster took his place on first, thus tying the game. Pratt allowed Foster to walk, bringing in the runner. Evans was the next man up. He made a good single, which, through miserable fielding by both Russell and Foster, who was running for Giles.

By this time the whole Freshman class was up in the bleachers and cheering the team. Lester next missed Breunau a third strike, allowing him to take second and Foster to score. Evans then came up, but with a few feet to go he was hit. He tried to play the ball, but was put out. A long slide to third was closing the inning.

Eight Starts Well.
In the first half of the sixth Pratt made a good slide to third and scored. After Lester had finished, the whole team was out when Evans caught a single long hit to stop left field. Fourth base was taken by Evans, who was called and threw to Breunau who had run across to first.

The latter part of the game was very exciting. Although the Harvard team was in no danger of losing. Another run was scored at the last of the eighth when Evans made a long hit to the right field. The game was over. The Harvard team won 6 to 2.

FEARING RECORD NOR STAGNATION

Trading Given Over to Petty Pool Operations, While Capital and the Public Look On With Languid Interest.

Stock speculators are looking to gain for a leader to carry the market out of its present depression. There is no leader on the bull side; there is no leader on the bear side; and the market drifts along in an apparently aimless fashion, like a ship without a rudder or pilot. Times have been rare in recent years when conditions similar to those existing to-day have obtained, and just as the greater bull speculators of a few years ago eroded all else in the history of speculation, so to-day the lack of interest and growing apathy towards the future to establish a record.

There is no demoralization in financial circles, unless it is in the way of inability to agree upon any specific appreciation of the future. The bear side is in the minority, but the bull side is in the majority, and the market is in a state of indecision. The market is in a state of indecision. The market is in a state of indecision.

Some Call for Morgan. In some quarters there is a cry for the return to leadership of J. P. Morgan. In other directions this cry is not at all heard; rather it is said that the day of Morgan's return has passed and that there can no longer be a day of his return. It is said that Morgan is today a man of the past, and that the market is in a state of indecision.

The prevailing feature of stock speculation is a general feeling of apathy. The market is in a state of indecision. The market is in a state of indecision. The market is in a state of indecision.

Big Cotton Crop Likely. There is also growing belief of a bountiful yield of cotton in the South this year. It is expected that the crop will be large, and that the market will be in a state of indecision.

Local Market. A local trader reports a price of 100 cents for cotton. The market is in a state of indecision. The market is in a state of indecision. The market is in a state of indecision.

ISSUE PROPOSED

Petition of B. & N. and Old Colony St. Railways Before Commissioners Tuesday.

A $100,000 bond issue will be the subject of a meeting of the B. & N. and Old Colony St. Railways before the Commissioners Tuesday. The meeting will be held at the B. & N. office.

BOND PURCHASES AGAIN SMALL. Cotton crop prospects are all that could be desired. The average is larger than last year, as the planters were tempted into sowing all the ground for the later in the season than in the case of the weather.

NEW YORK STOCKS. Following are opening, high, low and closing prices of New York stocks yesterday as compared with the previous day:

Has Effect of Reassuring Public and Brightens Entire Financial Outlook. The report of the cotton crop has a reassuring effect on the public and brightens the entire financial outlook.

By Boston American Learned Wire. New York, June 4.—Beyond question the most important developments on the market today were the Government's first report on the growing cotton crop. It was favorable beyond any expectation of the trade.

LONDON STOCK MARKET UNCERTAIN, THEN FIRM. London, June 4.—The stock market, after showing an uncertain tone in the early part of the day, closed firm in practically every quarter. Canada was the feature of the market.

GOVERNOR ON TOUR OF STATE INSTITUTIONS. Governor John A. Bates, Private Secretary Herbert H. Bates, and members of the Executive Council are in Northampton today for a tour of the state institutions.

The Profits of Wireless Telegraphy. The earning capacity of the prospective commercial transatlantic wireless service can be estimated from the data now known. The same cost of a transatlantic wireless service can be estimated from the data now known.

POSSIBLE REVENUE. One station, 30 miles apart, would cost $100,000. The revenue of a station, 30 miles apart, would cost $100,000.

PROBABLE EXPENSES. Cost of one station as described—$100,000, plus 10 per cent for labor and other expenses. The probable cost of a station, 30 miles apart, would cost $100,000.

2. LULU: "Oh, Charley, you swim beautifully."
CHARLEY ONTHESPOUT: "Thank you, Lulu. Well, I guess I've had enough of it for to-day. I'll go in and dress."
LEANDER: "It's well that you do, old man, so there will be no comparisons. I am going to put on my bathing suit and show you what graceful swimming really looks like."

3. LULU: "Why, I never knew you were a swimmer, Leander."
LEANDER: "Well, I'll show you! Charley will have to take a back seat when I get through."
CHARLEY: "All right, old man. Go in and win. I'll go in and dress."

4. LULU: "Now, Leander, let me see what YOU can do."
LEANDER: "Oh, I'll give you an exhibition of swimming that will be an exhibition."

5. LEANDER: "I'll bet they never saw such a graceful dive as that. I'll stay under water as long as I can and frighten them."
LULU: "Come, Charley, while Leander is enjoying his swim we will take a brisk walk up the beach so you can get your blood into circulation."

6. LEANDER (coming to the surface): "Ha, ha! Now what did you think of THAT? Where have they gone? Ye gods! There they go walling up the beach. All my grace and poetry of motion thrown away! x ! ! ! x x ! ! x x ! ! x Ten thousand furies! Did ever a lover have such luck?"

1. Oh, once there was a sassy tramp!
Sing hey dum diddle dee!

2. He made a grab for Johnny's pie,
And then he tried to flee!

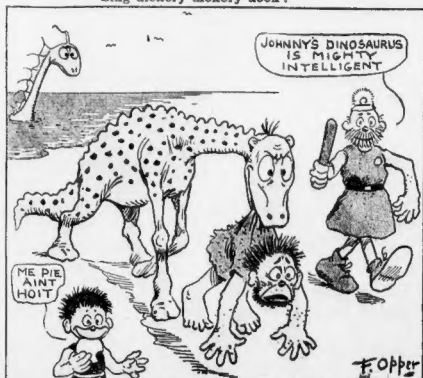

3. And when he thought that he was safe—
Sing dickery dickery dock!

4. He laughed with glee, then looked around,
And got an awful shock.

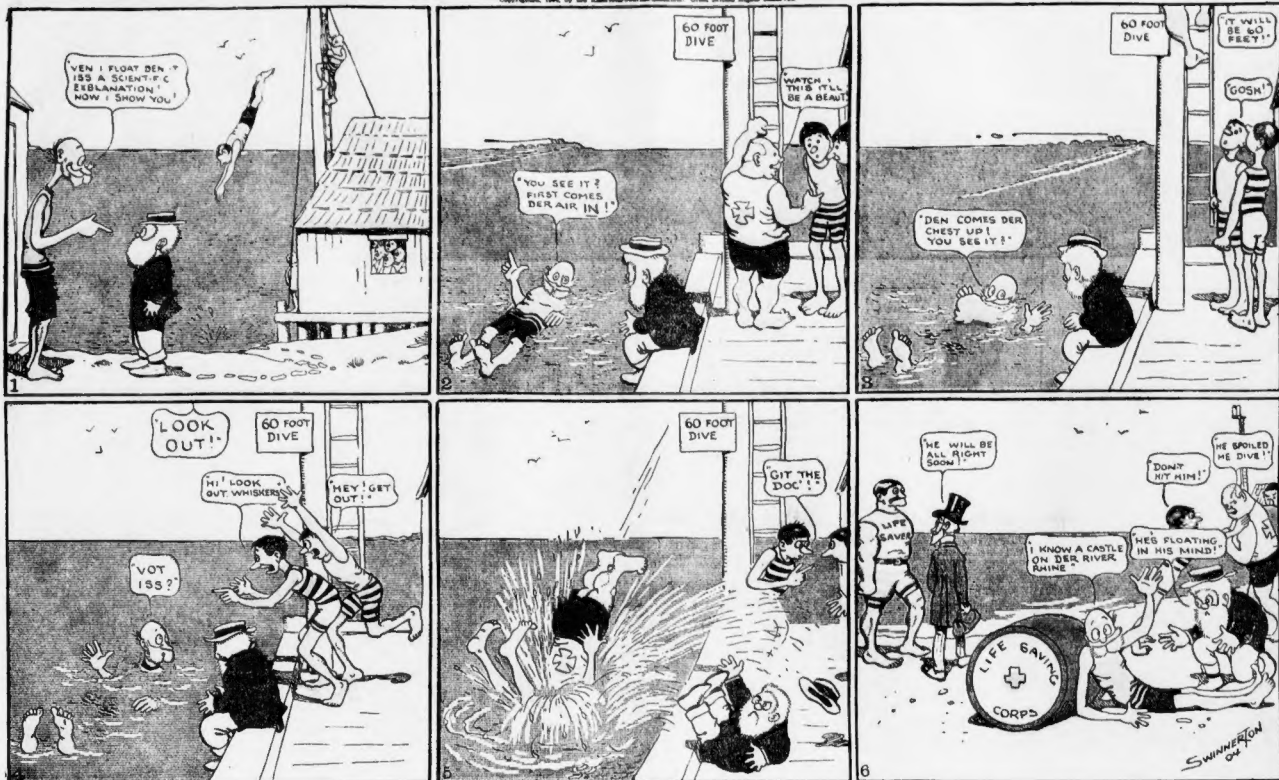

5. The moral of this tale is plain—
Sing tooral looral lay !

6. Be sure you're out of danger
Before you get too gay.

FOXY GRANDPA

The Boys Try to Give Grandpa a Little Scare, but He Wasn't Half as Scared as They Were.

1. GRANDPA: "Now, boys, stay near the shore and be careful of crabs."

2. BOYS: "When Gran'pa gets out further let's have some fun with him. We will yell that crabs have got us."

3. BOYS: "Now is the time. Gran'pa is swimming."

4. BOYS: "Help, Gran'pa, help! Crabs have got us."

5. BOYS: "Great Scott! There are really crabs here."

6. GRANDPA: "Hello, boys. Did my dive scare those crabs away?"
